Dear Friends,

Until recently, I had never shared my own experience with food insecurity. It's true that there is a stigma attached to food insecurity. As a child who relied on free meals in school, I remember feeling embarrassed with my lunch tray as I observed my classmates with their “My Little Pony” lunch boxes that were filled with homemade peanut butter and jelly sandwiches, orange juice and fresh apple slices. I longed to be like the other kids, with my own homemade sandwich and “My Little Pony” lunch box.

However, I also remember standing in the food lines with my grandmother at the local senior center as we waited for our share of government commodities. I was too excited to be embarrassed on those days, as I knew that we would receive items like cheese and milk – rare commodities in my home. On those days my worries were replaced with smiles as my grandmother would always treat me to a cup of milk and a homemade quesadilla. To this day, a quesadilla with a cup of milk, remains one of my favorite meals.

My life has come full circle and I feel so incredibly fortunate to be able to help other people in need. Helping to fight hunger in our community is more than a job to me, it’s personal. I also like to think that there’s a little girl out there standing in line for food with her loved ones, maybe wishing she had a special lunchbox like her friends, but when she receives a box of food, all she can do is smile.

Thank you for caring. Thank you for helping us to put smiles on the faces of so many in our community.

In Gratitude,

Stephanie Otero
CEO & Hunger Advocate
ON AIR WITH FARSB

We’ve been working hard to spread awareness about FARSB in hopes of inspiring local residents to learn more about the increased hunger crisis within the community.

Since the start of 2021, FARSB CEO, Stephanie Otero, has shared her personal story and the story of those we have served in various podcasts/radio segments, including:

- Socal Voices with Angela Ross
- Women We Love with Ellen K
- The Bazz show with Arbazz M. Nizami

Stephanie will soon be speaking at the ESRI User Conference 2021 on the nonprofit panel as well as hosting her very own Ted Talk this October 2021 for TEDxMSJC.

Stay up-to-date on our awareness efforts at www.FeedingIE.org/news.
